Christening of First-born Baby of Princess Mary

PRINCESS MARY'S baby, first grandchild of the King and Queen, was christened March 25 in the small village church of Goldsborough, which adjoins the Yorkshire home of Viscount Lascelles and Princess Mary. The King and Queen were present and the Archbishop of York officiated at the ceremony, which was simple. The baby, who got the name George Henry Hubert Lascelles, cried lustily during the greater part of it, to the delight of the villagers present, who believe it to be lucky.

Elaborate precautions were taken to keep visiting strangers away from the church. Its accommodation is very limited and the intention was to invite inside as many of the Goldsborough villagers and the tenantry from the Harewood estates as space would allow. On the day before the police, who had been increased to forty, were stopping motorists on the outskirts of the village and demanding their business, but on the day of the christening there were no obstacles to their entry.

The consequence was that automobiles and charabances from the surrounding towns brought so many people that Goldsborough never before had seen such a big gathering. Some seven thousand persons were estimated to be massed on either side of the village street while the christening was in progress, but not a single inhabitant of Goldsborough was to be found in the throng; all of them had seats in the church.

At the close of the morning service the King and Queen, Princess Mary, Viscount Lascelles and the sponsors and proxies took their places for the christening ceremony, and Master Lascelles promptly started to cry, and his voice gradually gathered strength until the congregation could not hear the words of the baptismal ceremony. Princess Mary and her husband at first looked somewhat uncomfortable, but soon resigned themselves to what could not be helped.

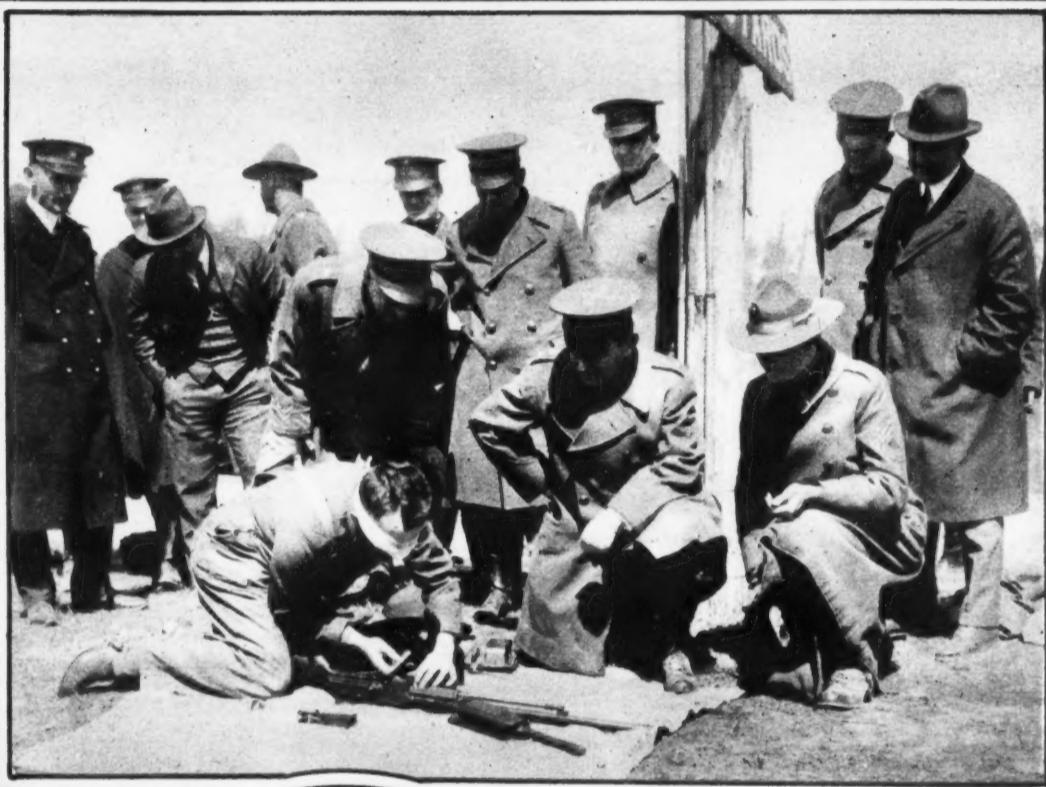

The baby's cries were stilled for a moment when the Queen took her little grandson into her arms, and when she named him "George Henry Hubert" her voice could be distinctly heard in every part of the church. But the baby made another vociferous protest when he felt the touch of the cold water, and the Archbishop's words were drowned until he said, "In order that with a full heart we may singly and collectively command this child to the love of God, let there be silence for one minute," when as the congregation knelt in silence the troubled cries of the little one died away also.

SINCE the divorce of Ganna Walska from her husband and the divorce of Harold F. McCormick from his wife and the subsequent marriage of the pair there has seldom been a week when some note of their doings has not been considered important enough to occupy a prominent part in the newspapers. The sudden departure of Mme. Walska from the Chicago Opera Company, which was said to be due to what she regarded as unfair criticism of her acting and singing ability, was followed shortly afterward by her marriage to Mr. McCormick abroad. On their return to this country recently after a prolonged stay in Europe the temperamental opera star made a concert tour in various leading cities, including Boston and Detroit. The tour was not a marked success, and the general tenor of the critics' reports was that as a singer Mme. Walska was a very beautiful woman. She returned to New York, criticised in her turn the unappreciative critics, and departed for Europe, where she will shortly be rejoined by Mr. McCormick.

FLIES AT RECORD SPEED

The progress made in aviation is so rapid that no record, however remarkable, is apt to stand for a very long time. While Sadi Leconte, the French "ace," hit the figure of 233 miles an hour, it was regarded as a wonderful performance. Lieutenant Lester J. Maitland, however, of the United States Army Aviation Service, shattered this record recently by beating the French aviator's distance for an hour by 10 miles. His average rate was 243 miles an hour, but at one point during his flight he was making a maximum speed of 281.4 miles an hour.

hearts when Easter morning brought with it a temperature of less than 20 degrees. True, there were Easter parades, the major one in Fifth Avenue, which was a brilliant assembly from church time throughout the remainder of the day, but they were shivery, chilly processions, in which persons walked rapidly on the sunny side of the street.

It hardly could be said that New York burst into bloom as in 1922, when it was chronicled that a more brilliant Easter had not been seen in years. Still the churches were crowded to overflowing, and thousands of persons waited outside the Fifth Avenue churches with the camera men for a glimpse of those who had gone in to worship. They were rewarded by seeing many of the fashionable worshippers hasten from the church steps into their limousines, fur collars tightly drawn, with not a trace of Spring finery, excepting here and there a Spring hat.

Corsages of appropriate flowers withered and died under the biting breeze. But it was a day of shifting atmospheric conditions, and when in the afternoon the temperature rose ten or more degrees there came a change in the costumes of the women who braved the day, and light summery effects could be glimpsed beneath fur jackets.

POLISH WORKERS FOR FRANCE

Scene at Dunkirk, France, on the recent arrival of a steamer from Poland. Polish workmen are shown swarming all over the deck and pier. They are being brought into the country at the rate of nearly one thousand per month in order to work in the devastated regions. There is a shortage of native man power, and the Polish newcomers receive a cordial greeting because of the close political ties at present uniting Poland and France. Part of the shortage in labor is due to the fact that thousands of workingmen have been called to the colors and sent to take part in the Ruhr occupation. Much has been done in the devastated sections of France to restore the land to its old fertility and to provide dwellings in place of those destroyed by the Germans, but the extent of the devastation was so vast that it will be many years before those once smiling regions can efface the scars of war.

LEANING PINE

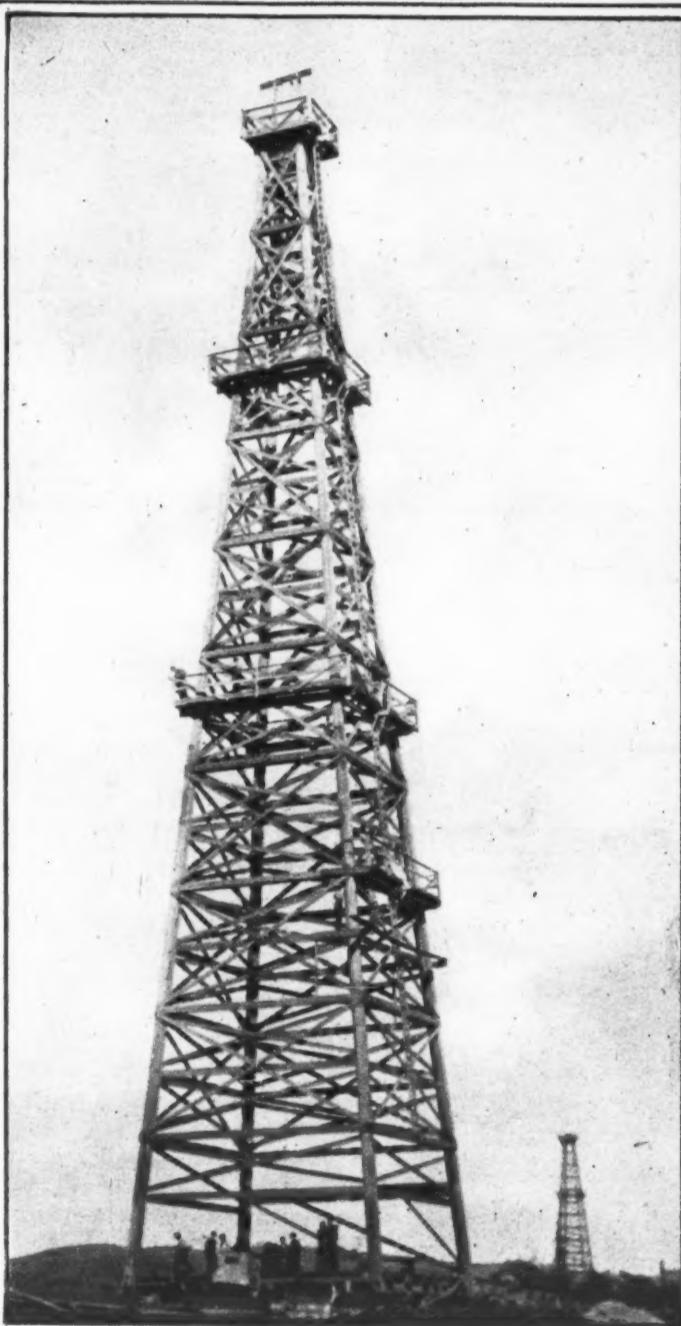

The curious angle at which a certain pine tree has grown on the golf links in Rome, Italy, has attracted a great deal of attention in the Eternal City and has brought tourists in large numbers to the spot. The enormous weight of its boughs and foliage having threatened to bring the tree to the ground beneath their weight, the city authorities of Rome have had this brick support constructed so as to preserve the tree in perpetuity.

PARADE OF BRUSSELS GIANTS

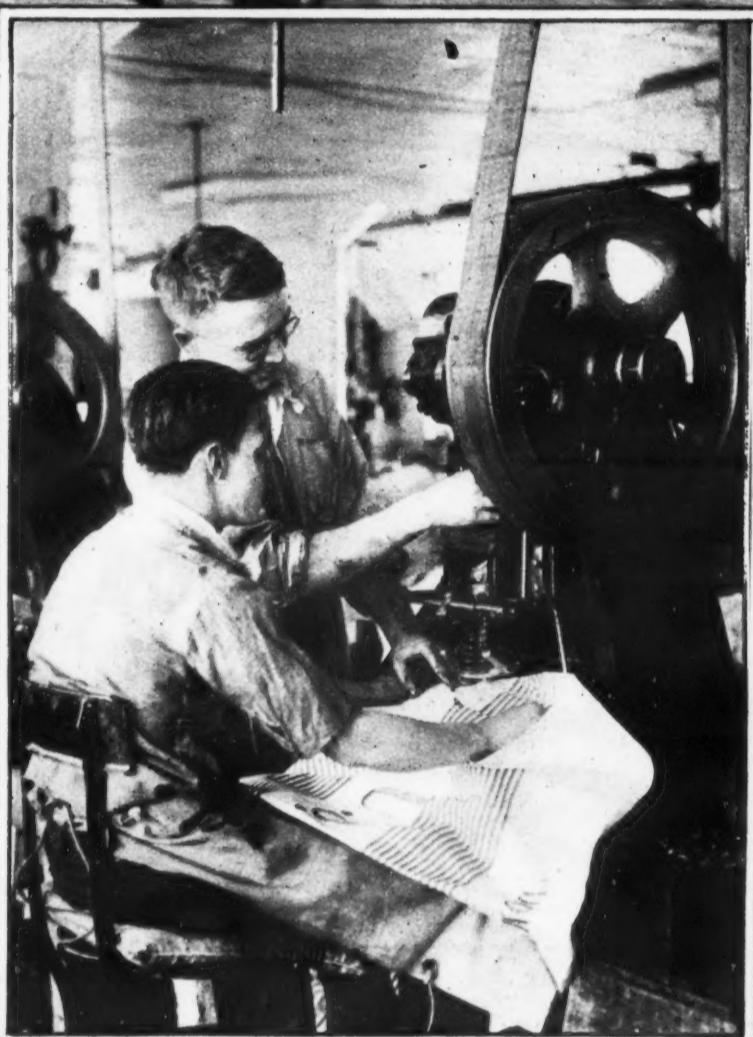

One of the interesting and amusing features of a recent Lenten carnival in Brussels, Belgium, was the appearance of these huge figures that moved like colossi among the throngs of spectators, whom they exceeded two or three times in height. The giants' parade is based on a very ancient custom whose origin is lost in the mists of antiquity. It has always been the most notable feature of the Lenten celebrations. (P. & A. Photos.)

HIGHEST OIL DERRICK IN THE WORLD
Towering 165 feet above the earth, this high oil well derrick, the tallest ever built, has been completed at Montebello, Cal., by H. L. Whiston, big oil operator. Sixty-five thousand feet of lumber were required to construct the great derrick, which has a base of thirty-two feet square, four times the ordinary size of such construction. The whole thing was built in two days—another world's record. The height of the structure can be conceived by comparison with that of the man standing at the base. (P. & A. Photos)

GREAT ROAD PROJECT

A road of sand with a shell top for auto traffic is being constructed all the way from Savannah, Ga., to Tybee Island, eighteen miles distant, over unspeakably soft and sloppy marshland. Millions of gallons of sand and water are being pumped through a fourteen-inch portable pipe line, the sand being distributed along the route of the highway and maintained between temporary walls until the water disappears, leaving a firm foundation of closely packed sand. Six miles of the road have now been completed. (Underwood & Underwood.)

WHILE as far as surface indications are concerned the tension between France and Germany in the Ruhr district is as great as ever, there are various indications that, hidden from public view, negotiations are going on looking toward a settlement. One hopeful sign is the fact that in the latest German statements the provision has been dropped that France must evacuate the Ruhr before Germany will open negotiations. The statement came from a high official source, and is generally accepted as reliable. If it be correct, it introduces an element of hope into the situation. It has been evident from the very beginning that such a proviso would never be accepted by the French. It is becoming more and more apparent to Germany that there is nothing to be hoped for in mediation from other nations. Repeated representations at Washington and at London have only elicited the reply that Germany must open conversations directly with the French and Belgians now occupying her soil.

As far as conditions in the occupied district are concerned, it is apparent that France is succeeding more and more in getting out the coal that she needs for her industries. Many of the striking miners are reported as returning to work. There is no relaxation in the strictness of the French regulations, and they are firmly repressing anything that looks toward sabotage or disorder.

A serious clash took place at the Essen Krupp Works on the morning of March 31. A detachment of French troops, attacked by workmen, were forced to use their firearms. Six Germans were killed and about twenty wounded. There were no French casualties. The clash occurred under these circumstances: A little after 8 o'clock a detachment of 160th Infantry, consisting of an official and eleven men, arrived at the Krupp Works in Essen to carry out a requisition of automobiles in the large Krupp garage. It appears that this French measure was known beforehand.

A few moments before the arrival of the soldiers all the sirens were blown, calling out the workers, who massed before the garage, the responsibility of the works' manager being thus gravely involved. When the little French force marched up the workmen crowded around them threateningly and then began to throw stones and pieces of coal. One or two revolvers also appear to have been drawn.

In face of this serious situation the French commander ordered his little force to take refuge in a smaller garage near by. The Germans thereupon turned hoses with steam jets on them. The officer, in face of such overwhelming odds, had no choice but to use force. After giving the usual warnings, which had no effect, he ordered the troops to fire a volley in the air. This failed to impress the overexcited Germans, and fire was then opened in deadly earnest. The Germans then stampeded, leaving their dead and wounded on the ground.

Shortly afterward an automobile with two French engineers belonging to a technical commission was attacked and overturned, the engineers being badly knocked about by the workmen and their money and papers taken from them before they could escape. A Belgian motorcyclist and a French police agent also were attacked and beaten.

General Henrys, commanding in Essen, took prompt measures to restore order. Tanks and machine guns were sent to the Krupp Works and under their protection the planned requisition was carried out.

Severe penalties will be imposed on the Directors of Krupps, who are held responsible for the affair.

According to information gathered by the French, these incidents were part of a definite plan to bring about a clash between the workers and the army of occupation. It is known that a number of ex-members of the security police were present exciting the men during the incident with the French detachment.

DISARMING GERMAN POLICE

The activities of the German police in the Ruhr have been so openly hostile to the French that the organization has been disarmed by General Degoutte in all the large towns of the district occupied by French troops. The baggage of some of the German policemen is here seen being examined by French soldiers in the barracks occupied by the police prior to their expulsion.

These men were swept into office in the overwhelming victory achieved by the Democrats in the Chicago municipal election of April 3. Left to right are: A. Gorman, City Clerk; J. A. The plurality gained by Dever was the largest ever rolled up by a candidate, except by Mayor Thompson, when he ran in 1915 and had 147,000 majority.

A COSTLY and disastrous fire swept over Nantasket Beach, one of the most popular seaside resorts in Massachusetts, on the night of March 29-30.

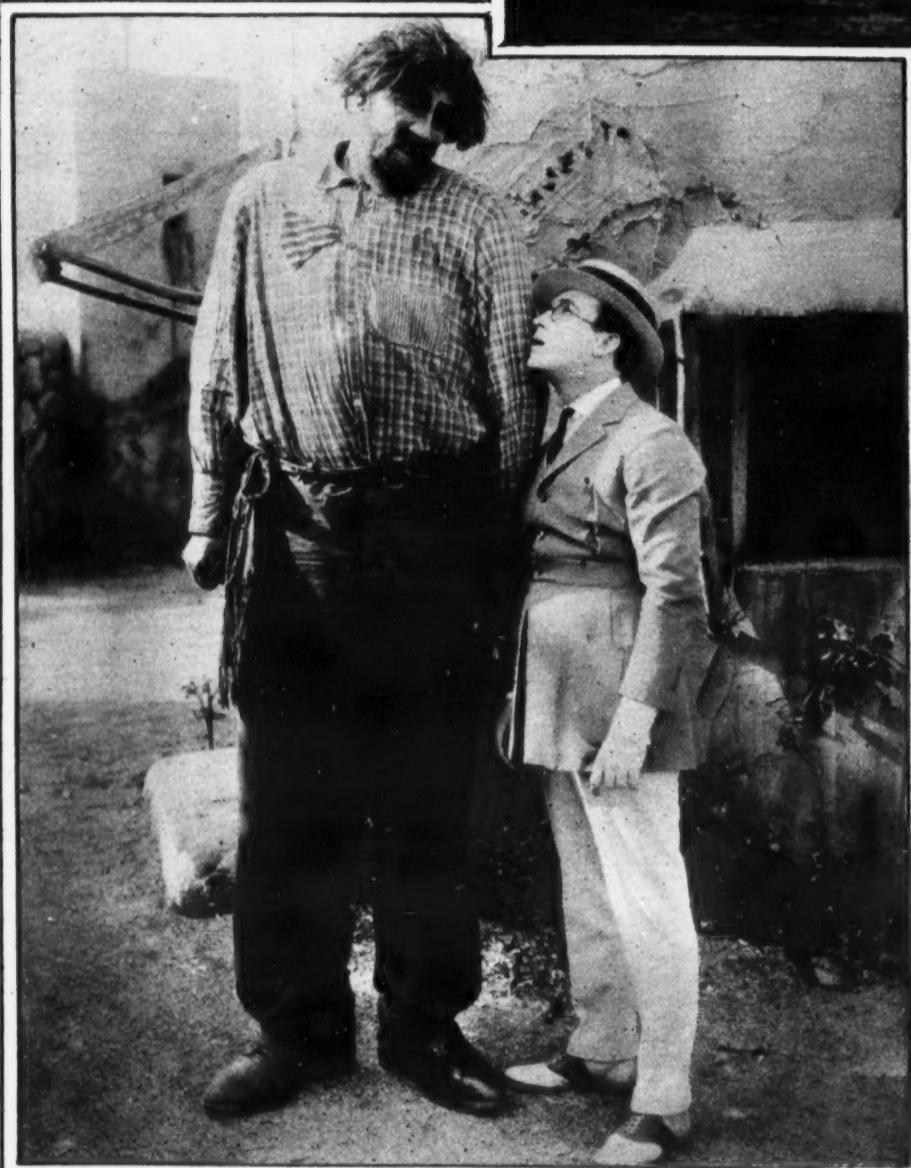

Spontaneous combustion in a paint shop near the band stand in Paragon Park is believed by Police and Fire Department officials to have started the fire, which destroyed the buildings covering an area of about a square mile in Nantasket Beach. The loss is placed at about $500,000.

In addition to several of the amusement structures within the park enclosure about forty cottages were burned. The westerly gale carried the flames from the amusement resort on the shore of Hull Bay over two hills and down to the shore of Starrett's Pond. They did not reach the Administration and Recreation Buildings of the Metropolitan District Commission or the bathhouses, which are on the edge of the beach and across a wide street from Paragon Park.

None of the hotels that dot the hills overlooking the ocean was burned. The Atlantic House had a narrow escape when the mansion of John J. Hurley, near by on Rockland Hill, one of the most elaborate residences in the town, was destroyed. Mr. Hurley placed his loss at $150,000. The damage to the Paragon Park buildings is estimated at $200,000.

No one was seriously hurt in the progress of the conflagration, which was fought by firemen from several cities and towns. About one hundred occupants of permanent residences which were burned were given shelter by neighbors.

Many of the cottages destroyed were used only during the Summer. The owners of Paragon Park announced that they would rebuild at once. The pier of the Nantasket Beach Steamboat Company on Hull Bay was at a safe distance from the flames, which the wind carried in the opposite direction.

NAVAL MANOEUVRES

Perhaps the most extensive and fruitful of the battle manoeuvres in the history of the United States Navy have been those that have taken place recently off the coast of Panama. The importance of the manoeuvres was attested by the presence of Secretary Denby of the Navy and staff, together with the Congressional Committee, who studied the battle practice with intense interest. One of the most picturesque features was the sinking of the famous old battleship Iowa by concentrated fire of the guns of the Mississippi. It will be remembered that she was the old flagship of "Fighting Bob" Evans at the battle of Santiago in the Spanish-American War. The historic vessel sailed, radio directed, to meet salvos from five-inch guns and was also greeted by fourteen-inch shells. She was reported on March 21 as a result of the practice to be sinking slowly and steadily in the Gulf of Panama.

The most important feature of the manoeuvres, however, was the test made as to the vulnerability of the Panama Canal against possible attacks by a hostile fleet. Admiral Jones, as Commander-in-Chief of the combined fleet, revealed to Secretary Denby's Congressional party the conclusions reached by the fleet that well-defined weaknesses exist in the canal defenses which must be made good by strengthening canal fortifications and air forces and the erection of sixteen-inch guns on Taboga Island, nine miles from the Pacific entrance.

Facing campaign maps in the wardroom of the transport Henderson, Admiral Jones reviewed the result of two recent tactical problems in which the fleet of 146 warships, now anchored in Panama Bay, participated, involving flank and frontal attacks on the canal.

The Admiral said the problem showed the weakness in the canal defenses were the susceptibility of vital parts to damage by aircraft bombs, the grouping of coast artillery too close together to prevent the attacking vessels, controlling sea and air, from reaching positions that permit firing on Miraflores Locks, and the need of sufficient aircraft to insure immunity from attack by enemy bombers should an enemy obtain a base within striking distance.

New Plays:
"If Winter Comes" : "The Enchanted Cottage" : "Sandro Botticelli"
"Morphia"

This scene from "The Enchanted Cottage," Pinero's latest comedy, playing at the Ritz Theatre, shows the mysterious miracle about which the story revolves under earnest discussion by the three principals, Katherine Cornell as the bride of Oliver Bashforth, Noel Tearle as Bashforth, who was maimed in war, and Gilbert Emery as Major Hilgrove, the blind Major, their confidential friend. Bashforth has been restored to health and his plain bride has become beautiful since their wedding a week before. They fear it is witchcraft, but the blind Major calls it a "miracle."

Moment in the play of "Sandro Botticelli," when the Italian artist (Basil Sidney) is pleading his suit with Simonetta (Eva Le Gallienne). She loves him, but also loves art and longs to leave some worthy heritage to posterity. She visits his studio to serve as model for a painting which she trusts may prove immortal. Her beauty makes him remember only that he is an artist and he forgets that he is a lover. Chagrined and humiliated, she flees his studio, contracts an illness and dies suddenly. Three days later, during all of which time he has been painting madly, her funeral cortège passes his window. He asks indifferently who is dead and learns that it is Simonetta. "Too bad," he murmurs, "but I have painted a masterpiece."

Climactic moment in the third act of "Morphia," at the Eltinge Theatre, with Olive Tell as Nurse Margaret, failing to cure Julian Wade (Lowell Sherman), whom she loves, of the drug habit that is killing him, determines to go down with him by the morphine route. He takes the deadly drug away from her and the shock affects him so violently that it opens his eyes to his own degradation and starts him along the road to redemption.

Does your work exhaust and fret you or leave you fresh and ready for fun?

CAN any woman be a good pal if evening finds her languid—uninterested, and uninteresting?

Some women seem to be invigorated by the very tasks that are irksome to others. They can iron, cook, sew, stand behind a counter or work all day in an office without drudging, because their vitality is not continually sapped by fatigue. Their work leaves them unfagged and vivacious.

Nagging Feet Tire You

Most women are on their feet a great deal of the time. Many of these women have learned that unnatural shoes—shoes with high heels, pointed toes, stiff arches—are one of the most common causes of fatigue. In such shoes your feet nag at your nervous system and gradually break it down. They make the feet hurt. And feet that hurt tire you. More than that, high heels tilt the body out of balance and cause backache and organic troubles.

Unnatural shoes weaken the foot muscles through disuse. Feet that have lost their muscular strength can no longer be young and springy.

Human Ingenuity Cannot Improve Upon the Foot

For this reason Cantilever Shoes are made to conform to the foot in every possible way. They have flexible arches instead of the usual stiff shanks found in ordinary shoes. The flexible arch gives just the right support and insures the foot sufficient exercise to strengthen the muscles that hold the bones of the arch in place. Guard against weakened foot muscles that cause the arch of the foot to flatten down. Many a woman suffers from "weak foot" who could have avoided it.

Cantilever Shoes Are Light-Weight and Restful

Cantilevers are made of fine, light-weight materials that are lasted to hold their shape. Natural lines have been cleverly built into them without spoiling their trimness. The neatly rounded toe is good looking. The low, medium or Cuban heel keeps the body correctly poised for health and comfort.

Look for the trademark when buying. It is your guarantee of the genuine Cantilever Shoe. If you do not find a dealer who is near you listed in the column at the left, write the manufacturers, Morse & Burt Co., 11 Carlton Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., for the address of a nearby dealer and for an informative and interesting book on foot comfort.

The Cantilever Shoe is endorsed by Women's Colleges, Women's Clubs, Public Health Authorities, Physicians, Osteopaths, Directors of Physical Education, Editors, Stage Celebrities, and prominent women everywhere.

Safe-Keeping Your Teeth by the Colgate Method

5 Good Rules for Good Teeth—Good Health

1—"Wash," Don't scour Your Teeth (you wouldn't scour piano keys)

2—After each meal

3—Use a safe Dentifrice

4—Rub the Gums (Gingival massage)

5—See your dentist twice a year

"Wash" your teeth thoroughly. Don't scour them. Washing cleans safely. "Scouring" cleans harmfully. Scouring scratches the enamel, the enamel protects the teeth, and you can't grow new enamel! Colgate's Ribbon Dental Cream contains no harsh grit. It cleanses and polishes by washing without scouring.

"Wash" your teeth after each meal. When you eat, particles of food lodge between and around the teeth. Remove them promptly before they ferment in the high temperature of the mouth. Fermenting food causes cavities in the teeth. A clean tooth doesn't decay. "Wash" your teeth regularly, carefully and thoroughly. Wash them just before going to bed.

Use a safe dental cream. Powerful drugs in a dentifrice injure the mouth and throat. Avoid any dentifrice so strong that it cannot be used safely several times a day. Select an established, tried-and-tested dentifrice with a reputation for merit. You can use Colgate's during a long life without in the slightest degree injuring the enamel of the teeth.

As advised by many dentists, after you use the tooth brush, finish the cleansing by rubbing both upper and lower gums with the tip of the forefinger covered with Colgate's Ribbon Dental Cream. That massage helps to keep the gums firm and healthy.

Some people try to doctor themselves, but even they don't attempt to be their own dentist. See your dentist regularly, twice a year at least.

PROBLEM OF THE MOMENT

Paul Painlevé, a former Prime Minister of France, criticises Poincaré's Ruhr policy. He says Germany must pay, but must first be reconciled. That the French people are not unanimous on the seizure of the Ruhr district is demonstrated by the pronouncement of Paul Painlevé, a former Prime Minister of France. His statement appears in the April number of Current History Magazine.

In the same issue J. Ellis Barker, British publicist, discusses Germany's financial condition, under-production and over-consumption being the chief causes of her inability to meet obligations. The discussion on the complexities of the case is rounded out by Ludwig Bendin, who gives the German-American view and emphasizes the fundamental causes of Germany's plight.

Current History Magazine for April also features the following world topics:

Four Power Pact, by Rear Admiral Pratt. The Puritan Tradition, by Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart. Foreign Policy of Great Britain, by E. D. Morel, Labor Group Leader in British Parliament. South American Despots, U. S. Rubber Interests, Agricultural Progress, by Secretary Wallace; Collapse of Education in Soviet Russia, Radio Progress, Canadian Bootlegging, American-Born Japanese, Health and the Doctors, Demands of German Feminists, etc.

The only magazine devoted to passing history. A mirror of the time.
